

CarePartners Estate Sales Service
5/25/16 - Paula Boop

Meaningful Connections. Meaningful things. Meaningful People.

Paula Boop is all about making meaningful connections. During the weekday, she works in the mortgage division at a bank. But on the weekends, you will find her volunteering at CarePartners Estate Sales. So how does she make her connections?

Through her associations with realtors from the mortgage division, Paula comes across people on a regular basis with a need to liquidate items from moving, downsizing, or selling the estate of a loved one who passed away. That's where she jumps in and mentions the Estate Sales!

Paula first heard of CarePartners Estate Sales when her mother was in hospice. When she passed away, Paula found herself with a big house full of things from four generations. She knew right where to turn.

“They came to the house, assessed all the items, gave me a quote, careful packed things, and hauled them away. It was that easy.” said Paula.

Paula mainly wants people to become aware of the service that helps hundreds of people during times when they have no energy, no time, and no place to sell their belongings. It is a service that enables you to help yourself, help CarePartners, and give back to the community.

If you ask Paula Boop what she likes best about volunteering for Estate Sales, she fills up with an infectious smile and says, “Just being here! It's fun, it's energetic, and you get to meet a lot of people.”
